Research Impact

Li J, D'Angiulli A, Kendall G. The Early Development Index and children from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds. Early Years, 2007, 27: 221-235 (A review and critique). The paper has provided a rationale and basis for locating funds to develop culturally appropriate measures and suitable community engagement and community feedback processes suitable for communities with significant numbers of Indigenous and CALD children. This led to a successful grant from Shell Australia and the Commonwealth Government (Department of Education, Employment and Work Relations) for the development and validation of the Indigenous AEDI (I-AEDI) (email correspondence with a member of the AEDI national project steering committee and one of the grant holders). The development and validation of an Indigenous AEDI (I-AEDI) is in progress and the Australian Government has committed to fund the next stage of a national roll-out which will include the development and validation of an AEDI appropriate for children from CALD family backgrounds.

Title: Developmental pathways to health, education and delinquency outcomes in Western Australia children: a holistic approach to inform early intervention strategies. LP0455417.
This project has created a unique research infrastructure by linking population level, longitudinal data bases across jurisdictions (health, education, juvenile justice and child protection and police) in Western Australia. Based on the success of the project, the WA government has committed long-term funding to maintain this linkage as a valuable State infrastructure. This data linkage is unique in the world and it has inspired national initiatives to create similar research infrastructure in other States. Also as a result of the success of the project, ten WA government departments have committed cash and in-kind contributions as partner investigators to a new ARC Linkage Project Grant application (pending) and maintain and extend this unique research infrastructure in WA which can also benefit researchers across the nation through interstate collaboration.

Media Attention

Wyndow, P., Li, J., Mattes, E. (2013) Female empowerment as a core driver of democratic development: A dynamic panel model from 1980 to 2005. World Development. 52(0) 34-54.

Since the publication of this paper in December 2013 it has received a significant amount of attention, particularly in Europe. The core findings from this paper were reported in the Tagesspiegel (March 13th 2014), which is the daily newspaper in Berlin, Germany and on the 8th March at 17:35 the International Women's Day, the German National Radio Station, "Deutschland Funk", broadcast an interview with the second author of the paper on the key findings of the study and their implications for development policy worldwide. Thüringen State Council for Women in Germany has requested an English version of the full publication for dissemination amongst its member organisations. This demonstrates that while the study mainly focused on developing countries, the findings also bears significance for gender inequality in developed nations.

In June 2014 the Friedrich-Ebert Foundation (FES) interviewed Pauls and Wyndow and Jianghong Li about the publication. The Friedrich-Ebert Foundation is Germany's oldest organisation committed to the promotion of social democracy worldwide. The interview was published the Foundation's Gender Matters Newsletter, which is distributed twice per year to the FES's 100 offices around the world.

Parents' nonstandard work and child wellbeing: A critical review of the literature. Journal of Primary Prevention (accepted 17th April 2013; published online first 10.1007/s10935-013-0318-z) <http://www.springerlink.com/openurl.asp?genre=article&id=doi:10.1007/s10935-013-0318-z>

This is the first comprehensive review of a new field of research on child health and development. The review was also funded by a nationally competitive grant (the Foundation for Children) and Dr Li was the lead applicant of the grant. The study findings were featured in The Daily Telegraph (the UK) and a major German TV's website (RTL) and influential German newspapers (Süddeutsche Zeitung and Mittelbayerische).

This study was funded by a nationally competitive grant (the Foundation for Children) and Dr Li was the lead applicant of the grant and the mentor of the first author as a postdoctoral fellow supported by the grant. Dr Li played a lead role in the conceptualisation of the study, and she has contributed significantly to the data analysis, interpretations of the results and numerous drafts of the manuscript.

The study findings were reported by ABC (Australia), the Live Science and Population Reference Bureau (the US) and major media outlets in Germany (eg, Spiegel, Deutschland Funk (Radio), Frankfurt Allgemeine Zeitung, to name just a few). A number of professional associations (eg, Working with Men Group in the UK and the Dentists Association in Germany) and individuals contacted the authors regarding their interpretations and further information on the study. On 28th January 2014, the leading German newspaper Die Zeit published a report of the study findings online and 148 readers have posted comments on the study. As a result from much media attention, the study has raised the awareness of the importance of fathers' role in child rearing. Dr Li has been invited to speak about fathers' role in child development at Working With Men Association in the UK in April 2014. The publicity of the study has also increased the interest and the reputation of the Raine Cohort Study, particularly among the researchers outside Australia working on the similar, but much larger, childhood cohort studies currently underway.

This is one of the few studies in the world that has linked breastfeeding to children's school performance. Dr Li played a lead role in the conceptualisation of the study and was responsible for the conduct of the analysis. This research has attracted a great deal of international media attention (The US and Australia) and the authors were bombarded with questions and comments from the general public around the world.

The world renowned expert Professor Michael Kramer from McGill University comments in his editorial: “This study is one of the best studies carried in the area” and the authors “have made an important contribution to the evidence base” (Kramer M. Long-term behavioural consequences of infant feeding: The Limits of Observational Studies. The Journal of Pediatrics, 2010; 156: 524) (Oddy WH, Kendall GE, Li J, Jacoby J, Robinson M, de Klerk NH, Silburn SR, Zubrick SR, Landau L, Stanley FJ. The following publications have received a great deal of attention from the media and the general public. I contributed to the conceptualisation of the study, design of the analysis, interpretation of the results and multiple drafts of the manuscript.

Dockery M, Li J, Kendall G. Parents work patterns and adolescent health and wellbeing. Social Science & Medicine (2009). The paper has received national and local media attention (Canberra Times 16/12/2008, Courier Mail (Brisbane) 16/12/2008, Sindh Today and Thaindian News (Sydney) 07/01/2009) on our findings that shift work has no detrimental impact on adolescents from two-parent families but it does have a negative impact on adolescents from single-parent families. This is one of few studies worldwide that have investigated the impact of parental nonstandard work on the health and wellbeing of children, and the first Australian study on this topic.
