THE PEOPLE: HEARING US, AS SENSIBLE

The last century has been characterized by fierce debates on national citizenship regimes—whether the rules to gain or lose the status of citizenship are just, whether the status of citizenship should be central in securing human rights, and whether the possession of citizenship requires a confirmation of identity. Existing regimes were evolved in a different era—when human mobility, legal structure, and technological development were all of a different character.

The workshop reflects on the challenges and opportunities that emerging technologies pose to existing theories and practices of citizenship.
